

The common glaze. One architect thinks the cinema.

The thesis proposes the possibility of translating the architectonic analysis pattern to the cinema. The visual analysis of twelve French films of the sixties, as well as the study of the existing documentation of them in the French Cinemathèque in Paris, will be the tools for demonstrating how both disciplines can share a common glaze to its work.