

Table of contents

Acknowledgements	7
Abstract	9
Resumen	12
Resumo	15
Preface	18
Introduction: Development and Agency	21
Part I
The Capability Approach and capabilitarian agency	44
Chapter 1. Humanizing development: taking stock of Sen's Capability Approach and its lessons for public policy and administration	46
1. Introduction	46
2. Economistic Development	47
3. Against utilitarianism and resourcism	50
3.1. Utilitarianism	51
3.2. Resourcism	53
4. Human Development	56
4.1. Evaluation space: functionings and capabilities	57
4.2. Motivation: agency and well-being	60
4.3. Intervening elements: conversion factors	63
5. The CA in practice: scope and limitations	66
5.1. Selection and valuation	67
5.2. Practical compromises	69
5.3. Under-theorization	72
6. Conclusions	75
7. References	79

Chapter 2. The reasoning agent: agency in the Capability Approach and some implications for development research and practice	83
1. Introduction	85
2. The rational choice approach and agency	86
2.1. Rational choice theory (RCT) and the rational agent	87
2.2. Preferences and revealed preference theory (RPT)	88
2.3. Methodological individualism	89
3. The CA and rationality	90
3.1. Rationality as reasoning	91
3.2. Rationality and choice	93
3.3. Rationality and reasonableness	95
3.4. Reasoning and agency	96
4. The CA and freedom	97
4.1. Freedom and rationality	97
4.2. Freedom and achievement	98
4.3. Rationality and achievement and conversion factors	100
4.4. Freedom, achievement and the individual	102
4.5. Freedom and agency	102
5. Capabilitarian agency and the philosophy of science	104
6. Conclusions	107
7. References	109

Part II

Pragmatism and pragmatic agency	114
--	------------

Chapter 3: Form follows function in evidence-based public policy: the pragmatic alternative to the positivist orthodoxy	116
1. Introduction	118
2. Positivism	120
3. Positivist Public Policy	126
4. Pragmatism	131
5. Pragmatic Public Policy	135
6. Conclusion	139
7. References	142

Chapter 4: The transagent: some implications of pragmatism and its concept of agency for development research and practice 146

1. Introduction	148
2. Philosophical ontology	150
2.1. A heuristic device: the knower-known and observation-knowledge relationships	152
2.2. Analyticism	154
3. Pragmatism as analyticist	155
3.1. Pragmatic agency: the transaction of self and society	158
3.2. Habits, selves and action	158
3.3. Pragmatic agency: the 'self' in 'action'	159
3.4. Objects, meaning and action	160
3.5. Between unreflective and reflective acts	161
3.6. The pragmatic transagent	162
4. Pragmatism, social science and development	162
4.1. Pragmatism and development practice	164
4.2. Pragmatism and development research	165
4.3. Explaining, understanding and cross-fertilization	166
4.4. Values, and ethics	167
5. Conclusion	169
6. References	171

Part III

Towards a Pragmatic Capability Approach 176

Chapter 5: Towards a Pragmatic Capability Approach: agency, ontology and empirical issues 178

1. Introduction	178
2. Agency	179
3. Ontology	195
4. Empirical issues	202
5. Conclusions	205
6. References	207

Chapter 6: Towards a Pragmatic Capability Approach: freedom, democracy and normativity	211
1. Introduction	211
2. Freedom	212
3. Democracy	223
4. Normativity	233
5. Conclusions	238
6. References	240
Conclusion: Agency and Development	244